Hosted the Second International Chordoma Community Conference for 120 chordoma survivors, family members, and caregivers, to hear updated information from leading physicians and researchers. This powerful event was an opportunity for members of the chordoma community to connect with others who share common

With the input of our Scientific Advisory Board, participants of our Research Workshops, and a diverse group of scientific experts from around the world, we have created a comprehensive research roadmap for developing new effective treatments for chordoma and improving the lives of chordoma patients. The Chordoma Foundation leads a coordinated, multidisciplinary team-effort to drive this plan forward, and systematically breaks down barriers that stand in the way of progress.
Model systems are research tools that mimic the behavior of human tumors, and allow researchers to study cancer without experimenting on people. They are needed to develop virtually any type of new therapy, however limited availability of valid models of chordoma is a major barrier to progress. To overcome these barriers the Chordoma Foundation has awarded grants for the development and Access to high-quality chordoma biospecimens is the biggest obstacle for chordoma research, especially since the majority of tumor beyond what is needed for clinical diagnosis is usually discarded. To solve this problem, the Chordoma Foundation is establishing a Biobank and will proactively collect, analyze, and distribute biospecimens and associated data to and from hospitals and labs. The Biobank will give patients an opportunity to actively participate in the search for a cure by contributing tumor, blood, DNA, and clinical information about their disease. It will also enable researchers from multiple fields to apply the latest scientific advances to understand the cause of chordoma and develop new treatments.
